Milne He was the most amazing boy in the world because he loved to play and he was very good at it, and had never been cross. He had a magnificent red head, and his hair, which had never been cut since the day of his birth, was a mass of glistening curls that reached halfway down his back. He had two fat black eyes, and his two ears were rimmed with gold. He had a dignified way of walking and a nice smile, though sometimes you could see a tiny crease in his nose. His wardrobe was the envy of all the other boys in the class. Trousers were his trademark, but he liked every kind, from the tight-fitting ones that really showed off his thin legs to the baggy ones which made him look almost grown up. His favourite colour was yellow, and he often took it with him everywhere on his fingers, waist, legs, T-shirt and socks. He always put a yellow flower in his buttonhole and tied up his black, striped tie, and his every hat sported a yellow rose. But his proudest possession was his bicycle, which he was allowed to take everywhere. This four-wheeled affair was some eighteen inches high and could go for miles without stopping, and it always had a splendid wooden seat and red leather top, and a bell on the handlebars.
