The riots come more than a month after violent protests paralyzed parts of the U.S. commonwealth and brought the government to the brink of collapse. In the three days of demonstrations in April, Puerto Rico was thrust into financial crisis as demonstrators blocked roads and cut off power. The local government declared a state of emergency and declared a major financial emergency. The rioting coincided with the passage of a new law that would have cut social programs and privatized essential government services. The legislation, which also raised taxes and fees, was declared unconstitutional by the Puerto Rico Supreme Court.
