A simple method for gene transfer into murine cells in vivo is described. Transfection of lymphoblasts and lymphoma cells in vivo was accomplished by mixing directly the cells with plasmid DNA without employing a cell culture stage. The intact plasmid DNA was introduced into the cells by electroporation. The number of the DNA-transfected cells was determined by selection of the cells with the antibiotic G418. The genetic properties of the transfectants obtained were examined by Southern blot analysis. Furthermore, the subcellular localization of the foreign DNA was investigated in both cells by the method of flow cytometry. The effect of
