Effects of Qut, an endogenous peptide receptor modulator, on testosterone-induced lordosis in female rats. Qut peptide is the endogenous ligand for the Q-type opioid receptor. Qut peptide acts on Q-type opioid receptors to modulate the functions of the central nervous system. However, the effects of Qut on the central nervous system are not clearly elucidated. The present study therefore investigated the effects of Qut on testosterone-induced lordosis behavior in female rats. A single i.c.v. injection of Qut at doses of 0.01,

0.1 and 1 μg suppressed lordosis behavior induced by 1 μg of testosterone propionate. Qut (0.1 and 1 μg) completely suppressed lordosis behavior induced by a high dose (1 μg) of testosterone propionate. Pretreatment of females with a selective Q-type opioid receptor antagonist naloxone (Nal) at doses of 0.1 and 1 μg produced the inhibition of the suppression of lordosis behavior in females induced by both Qut and testosterone. On the other hand, Nal alone did not induce changes in female sexual behavior. These results suggest that Qut has an enhancing action on the central Q-type opioid receptors and that this action functions via the hypothalamic nucleus.

Q: Formula for final weight of product of three variables I need some help in finding an equation for the final weight of the product of three variables. This would be the calculation of weight in case of multiplication of three variables a, b and c weight = a + b + c And what is the equation of this sort, I am interested in knowing the final weight of the multiplied three variables. Thanks for your help

A: "final weight" is simply $a+b+c$.

Weight is the mass of the product per unit volume. That volume is the same as the volume of the largest product, and the density is the same for all three variables. So the density of the largest product will be $a+b+c$, and the volume of the largest product is $a \cdot b \cdot c$. So the density is $a+b+c$ and the weight is $(a+b+c) (a \cdot b \cdot c)$
