Zeltbahn will plunge players into the middle of a dramatic WW1 German battle raging from the ice cold tundra of the eastern Russian fronts to the heat of the desert of North Africa. Players must use everything at their disposal - as soldiers, sailors, airmen, and land-based artillery to overcome a highly detailed and challenging game-play experience. In the game universe, WW1 has come to an end and the armies of Germany and Britain have signed a non-aggression treaty as the world awaits the dawn of a new era. However, the treaty cannot hold and Germany, taking advantage of the sudden absence of British forces in the area, launches a massive attack across their front. The Allies, fighting a defensive campaign in the deserts of North Africa, respond to this assault by establishing a forward defensive line that stretches across the eastern Russian front for thousands of miles - from the freezing steppe of the Kolomna region and the sandy wastes of The Black Sea, through the mountains and wilderness of the Caucasus, down to the lush waters of the Caspian Sea. The armies of Germany and Britain fight fiercely across this battle line, with one side trying to push the battle towards the Persian Gulf and the Bosphorus, the other to push the war to the end in the all important Amritsar region. Only one side can win, and the most difficult task will be to hold the front... ist Wednesday, 8 January 2015 In researching Wm Atwater's correspondence, my current project came to light, for you can see from my comments to that excellent historian, here, that I have been working on this for a long time. I am contacting his widow (or actually his daughter) and it is possible I will be getting responses from her in the next few days. My confidence level is gradually building that this is not just data created for me by a nonces, but that I can trust at least some of the claims of the letters (mainly that he was ambivalent as to whether he was an accomplice of John Machi, or merely paid for services rendered). I know it would be logical for a nonces as a police officer to create a 'false trail' so that any police investigating the NWA conspirators could think they were talking to the biggest con-man on the planet, rather than someone who could actually provide them with valuable information. Several things in the letters, to me, indicate that he was willing to be involved with certain NWA conspirators and to cooperate with them, getting money from them. I am doing this as it seems he was a very well-off man living in a time of hardship, so the moment he starts to fall behind in his bills he has the police investigating him and giving him hard times. It is probably also possible that he fell behind in his bills because he was helping some of the people in the group. Or maybe he really did live more or less for nothing and had no money. This would explain his apparent willingness to accept this proposal from Crabsbottom: "If you have matter at heart, do you not think you had better have a pot ready to receive it, for no small matter will I recover from you, whether you are a man or a woman." (letter to FB, from March 1537) That would also explain his apparent willingness to have a talk with Machi and the most important conspirator, Andrew Boynton, at Crabsbottom's house in the week before Crabsbottom's murder. My reasoning for being an accomplice of Crabsbottom is that he evidently could carry out the murder and I do not see why he would need to get information from me or pay me to find that out. In fact, I would say that is exactly the opposite of what he would be doing, however nice his behaviour (or approach) might be. What he
