Anyways, the title is a bit bold, because it sounds like at first the message is that the seven brothers had a chance to do a deal, but when they find out that the kid won't be punished, it implies that the kid could be a pirate, because after all, he was the son of one of the Seven. Jürgen Altmann Jürgen Altmann (born 30 June 1964) is a German journalist and war correspondent. He is working as a reporter for Berliner Rundfunk and Al-Jazeera. He is one of the few journalists who have reported from both Afghanistan and Iraq. In 2003, he was imprisoned by the Taliban in Afghanistan for three months. Altmann has been working as a foreign correspondent for the Berliner Rundfunk since 2002. After his first trip to Iraq in 2004, he has reported from numerous countries, including Lebanon, Pakistan and Afghanistan. From 1998 to 2000, he has covered the Kosovo War for Panorama magazine. In addition, he worked for the Frankfurter Rundschau from 1992 to 1995 and served as a correspondent in Bonn and Washington. During the Balkan conflict in 1999, Altmann and two colleagues, Alexander Augenstein and Shaul Golan, were captured by the FR Yugoslavia Special Forces. They were left for months in Skopje and then released. Awards World Press Photo Award for the best photograph of the year 2002 (with Golan). The concept of identity is inherently circular. Identity is inferred from self-esteem, in turn linked to self-esteem, which is inferred from self-identity. This self-identity may itself be inferred from a sense of self-worth or, more abstractly, as an experienced state of being. Drawing on research in a clinical context, this article explores how feelings of self-worth and experience of self-identity may change in response to traumatic experiences. Two case examples are used to illustrate how, through these processes, patients make sense of their painful life experiences and search for a sense of worth.
